

ATEE Annual Conference 2018

PROGRAMME

ATEE

Association for Teacher Education in Europe

A Future for All

Teaching for a Sustainable Society
20th – 22nd August 2018

University of Gävle
Gävle, Sweden

Welcome

It is with a great pleasure we welcome you to the 43rd Annual Conference of Association of Teacher Education in Europe ATEE. The theme of the conference A future for all – teaching for a sustainable society pay attention to critical questions concerning changes in society.

We have invited three distinctive scholars as keynote speakers to explore different aspects of the conference theme. We are certain they will be inspiring and that they will stimulate interesting and profound discussions. Equally important for the conference discourse are the approximately 150 papers to be presented in paper sessions, poster sessions and symposia.

The ATEE conference has been known for its informal and friendly atmosphere. We will do our best to make sure the 2018 Annual Conference follows the tradition.

We hope you will enjoy the ATEE Annual Conference 2018 and your stay in Gävle.

Best regards
The Organizing Committee

The host of the ATEE Annual Conference 2018

The University of Gävle has approximately 17 000 students. The prime area of focus is on a sustainable human living environment. Our work for sustainability includes ecological, social as well as economic aspects, which are integrated throughout the University on all levels and promoted by research.

All students, faculty members and staff are important in our efforts to develop knowledge, understanding and competence for a sustainable living environment for all future generations. The university has always been a forerunner for sustainable development in higher education and was one of the first universities in Sweden to reach certification of the environmental management system. It offers more than 50 study programs, second-cycle programs, and 500 courses covering humanities, social and natural sciences as well as technology. Students can study full-time, part-time, evenings, on distance or via the Internet.

The Faculty of Education and Business Studies encourage an international environment and strives to integrate an international and sustainable perspective into education, research, and even administration. Students at the faculty shall through a quality assured internationalization process meet people, environments, thoughts and ideas from other parts of the world in order to evolve and acquire skills for living a sustainable life in a globalized world. The research areas are especially extensive with many national and international networks and publications. Examples of recent or ongoing research is about teacher commitment, how to prevent violence in schools, how scientific concepts are understood in pre-school and at university level, bullying, ethical and moral dilemmas in education, early childhood literacy, the use of digital technology and the importance of relations in educational settings.

Conference theme

The 43rd Annual ATEE conference theme A future for all – teaching for a sustainable society emphasizing teacher education and education as the solution to broad societal problems.

Education has a responsibility to foster skills, attitudes and behavior that will lead to sustainability and inclusive growth. The urgent need to understand the past for building tomorrow with new approaches in education puts important questions in focus regarding human wellbeing, social inclusion, environmental protection and globalization. These perspectives and approaches in research and practice in teaching and teacher education calls for a rethinking of what the educational sciences now consist of and how they are characterized.

Thus, we have identified the following subthemes for the annual conference 2018: Innovation and sustainable changes in education; Professional teachers: understanding today – building tomorrow and Sustainable perspectives on theory and practice in teacher education. By focusing on these themes we will explore what kind of innovation in education can be considered as sustainable in the long term perspective and how we as teachers, teacher educators and researchers can contribute with approaches in education to re-affirming democratic practices and claiming for a more equal, just and sustainable society.

Acknowledgements

The local organizing committee gratefully acknowledges:

- The Faculty of Education and Economics at the University of Gävle for hosting the ATEE 43rd Annual Conference

The Association of Teacher Education in Europe (ATEE)

The Association of Teacher Education in Europe strives to promote the development of both initial and continues teacher education at all levels. Moreover, it aims to strengthen and promote scientific research in the of education and the dissemination of related results.

ATEE, founded in 1978, has established itself as a meeting place for educational researchers, teachers and teacher educators in the European countries and other countries in the world. The core activities of the Association involve holding an annual, peer-reviewed conference, production of the journal European Journal of Teacher Education in Europe as well as the ongoing work of the constituent networks Research & Development Communities (RDC). The RDC:s are thematic working groups where teacher educators from all over Europe and beyond meet, exchange ideas and co-operate. The main idea are shared research, EU-funded projects, publications and the organization of thematic seminars. The RDCs are the core of the Association.

ATEE is open for student teachers, teachers, teacher educators and for everyone that has an interest in teacher educational research in the European context. The Association is based on individual and institutional membership. The benefits for joining ATEE are free subscription to the European Journal of Teacher Education in Europe, on-line access to the articles, language support for authors who wants to submit an article and awards competition.

Key note speakers

Monday 20th of August 11.00 – 12.00 Lecture Hall, Valhall, house 41

Professor Vinayagum Chinapah (emeritus), Stockholm University, Sweden

Vinayagum Chinapah (Sweden and Mauritius) is Professor, Chair Holder and Head of the Institute of International Education (IIE), Department of Education, Stockholm University, Sweden. Professor Chinapah took leave from IIE in 1992 to be at UNESCO Headquarters in Paris as Director of the Joint UNESCO-UNICEF International Program on Monitoring the Quality of Education and Learning Achievement which covered some 80 countries world-wide during the period (1992-2006). He also served for one year as UNESCO Regional Educational Adviser for the Arab States, UNESCO Regional Office, Beirut, Lebanon (2007-2008) before returning back to lead IIE in January 2009. He has done research, training, and consultancies for several UN agencies (UNESCO, UNICEF, UNDP, FAO); International agencies (The World Bank, OECD); bilateral agencies (SIDA, Finnish CIMO, CIDA, Commonwealth Secretariat) and several national governments and institutions in some 140 countries world-wide over the past 35 years.

Abstract for key note:

Education for Sustainable Development – Needs and Challenges

It is an absolute necessity today to have “a new education discourse” in order to effectively address the world’s rallying cry where education plays a unique role in meeting the UN 17 sustainable development goals (SDGs) championed by the United Nations for the period 2015-2030. Our world is changing at a remarkable pace, where 40% of the world’s population and three-quarters of the world’s poor, mostly rural population, continue to be vulnerable to poverty, malnutrition and poor health, gender inequality, lack of education, ecological disasters, and food insecurity. Although there are some improvements, the figures that depict the status of the world’s poor continue to reveal an unacceptable reality. Globally, 1.2 billion people (22 percent) live on less than $1.25 a day; 98 percent of those killed and affected by natural disasters are from developing countries, and by 2025, more than half the people in developing countries may be vulnerable to floods and storms. By the same time, water scarcity affects more than 1.8 billion people—hurting agricultural workers and poor farmers the most. There are 58 million children out of school; 781 million adults and 126 million youth worldwide lack basic reading and writing skills in 2012, and more than 60 per cent of them are women; and rural primary school-aged children are twice as likely to be out of school compared to their urban counterparts.

In the conclusion of the outcomes from the 2010 Education for Rural Transformation (ERT) Symposium in Stockholm (in V.Chinapah, 2011:xiiv), the authors argued that “(D)eveloping countries have been struggling to address the challenges in education that may be described as the triad of a) access with equity b) quality and relevance, and c) efficiency and accountability. Although progress is made in every country, the shortfall in achieving the 2015 education goals in many countries indicate that the national plans and programs have to be re-assessed and re-examined to ensure that the rural dimensions of the educational agenda are adequately and specifically reflected in these efforts. The dynamics of rural transformation in the “globalized” world of the 21st century have created new educational imperatives which go beyond the traditional concerns regarding rural communities and need special attention”.

Education is central to fostering sustainability and plays an important role in the development of societies, both locally and globally. Education for sustainable development is an educational model that seeks to empower people to assume responsibility for creating a sustainable future. By using a holistic approach to learning, the learners are encouraged to construct their own knowledge and understanding through active participation, allowing them to discover facts, ideas and meanings first-hand. In this way, educating the learners for sustainable development will provide the skills, perspectives, values and knowledge to live in a sustainable way.

Abstract for key note:

Educational challenges and ethical dilemmas in time of academic capitalism: is “expanded professionalism” a solution for a sustainable and inclusive society?

In today's world universities have different responsibilities and obligations. Not only that they have to be key platforms for research and knowledge production, together with its pedagogical, educational aim to educate future professionals, but they are more and more asked to participate in social and economic development while achieving its own sustainability (creating programmes that can be “sold” on the world educational market). These demands are often contradictory especially if university development and its strategies are fostering programmes “guaranteeing” employability, focusing on skills training. Curricula for employment or for present day needs neglect learning outcomes that are oriented toward critical thinking and educational needs of communities and individual students that are related to their own context and environment.

New words like benchmarks, social inclusivity, entrepreneurialism, sustainability create framework that imposes different values in both, academic and continuous professional development. Entrepreneurialism is often seen and demanded as “expanded professionalism” (Elia, September 2017) for all academic graduates as a key skill that they should bring in future professional life, the only skill that would help local development and its social sustainability. Responsibility for employment is transferred from public bodies and private companies to young professionals, artists and teachers, engineers and physicians that are now educated to be entrepreneurs in their domains. But, if the education is limited to foster skills and behaviors that are desirable in this moment, other values, mostly linked to humanities and arts education, are neglected in spite of the fact that there is no way to understand future without understanding of the past, and not real entrepreneurial initiatives are possible if student is not trained to understand contextual changes not only of today but also of future. This paper starts with hypothesis that contemporary educational practices and research are under strong public policy influences, limiting university's autonomy and limiting diversities in approaches that are needed for different sociocultural contexts. In present globalized world, universities are looking more and more to compete with each other, not to develop itself according to their values and needs. A critically engaged university is the one that should be proactive in creating new debates and discovering new challenges within globalized but still diversified world. In this respect, teachers' training is the most difficult part of university education as it is crucial for the future life of the community offering values, concepts and tools to those professionals that are going to be in the “battleground” – mediating ideas of the past (community culture of memory), discussing present day challenges and ideas for the future – educational perspectives to young ones.

Teachers are key social and cultural agents in society that is changing so quickly in its demographics, attitudes, and policy orientations. Even the facts about the past have to be reinterpreted and recontextualized, often by using participative research methods, social discussions, public debates questioning societal norms, ethical controversies.

Thus, not only human rights but also social justice, has to be part of these discussions, as well as numerous questions that are coming with new migrations and other global challenges, while schools and universities have to find ways to refuse different pressures of the “cultures of management” (Prothorough and Pick 2002:49) that would make their organization more marketable, profitable and efficient. Because of that, teachers’ training and their continuous professional development had to provide opportunities to remix the knowledge (Lessig 2004) in the age of access (Rifkin 2000), knowledge that is created by multiple social agents in all sectors overcoming disciplinary boundaries and bringing ideas “in from the margins”. That would be the only way of educating new educational professionals that will be capable to link research and teaching practices, always challenging and questioning present paradigms and imposed frames – acting in a public interest and against “academic capitalism” (Dragičević Šešić 2017).

His teaching and research focus on designing learning processes and learning spaces that enable people to contribute meaningfully sustainability.

Abstract for key note:

Teaching to sustain and to disrupt: education in times of systemic global dysfunction

How do we teach young people to live well, equitably and within planetary boundaries; when structures, values and assumptions upon which we are building our lifestyles make living in such a way nearly impossible; when we as educators don’t really know either and don’t live in that way either; when there is confusion, sometimes intentionally created, about how dysfunctional and urgent things are and what should be done? And how do we prevent that we all slide into a stage of permanent fear and despair since the challenges seem so overwhelming?

What is becoming increasingly clear is that sustainability is not something that can be taught, that it is not only about sustaining what we might deem to be good, but also about disrupting what forces us to live in unhealthy ways. Creating environments that ‘breathe’ sustainability and a culture that invites critical thinking, transgression and action, is becoming a new challenge for our schools. In this talk I will outline a systemic response from education that involves the whole institution as a part of a wider community and require boundary-crossing and forms of learning that are transformative and transgressive learning. I will also discuss the kinds of capacities teachers and students alike, will need to deal with complexity, ambiguity, socio-scientific disputes and to facilitate boundary crossing within a critical whole school approach.
